MADE BY Warber & Ralston. HS HAD A MANIA.

And His Wife Thought a Stop the Put to It. A policeman on West Madison str accosted yesterday by a pale, and woman, whose eyes were full of unshed tears.

"I wish," she said, "that you would go to the second floor of that building over there and arrest a big redheaded manine you will flad there."

"Who is he, and what has he been doing?"

"He is my husband. Doing? What hasn't he been doing? You know that times are hard, I reckon; well, they're harder in our house than anywhere else in the state of Illinois. The wholo family's down with diphtheria except the old man and me. The old man has a mania for collecting swords and other weapons. That was all right when when we had money in the house and no sickness, but now he's out of work and it's going to ruin us. The other day I gave him $\mathbb{E}$ to go to the drug store and buy medicine, and he came house with an old claymore about three feet long that he said Lochiel was carrying when the wizard sppared to him."

"Didn't he bring the medicine?"

"No, he didn't. I lectured him and gave him $\mathbb{E}$ more to go on the same errand, and in three hours he came back carrying a Persian scimiter that you might have sliced off the head of a rhinoceros with. He said it was the same scimiter that Mustapha used to carry. The next day I let him have

"You are very unfortunate, madam."
"Unfortunate? That's not the word.
Next time that I had to have medicine I went after it myself, but while I was away my husband took away the cook stove on a wheelbarrow and traded it for the knife ATTORNEY AT LAW -LEGAL BUSINESS of that Charlotte Corday used to carve Marat. He is now anxious to get hold of the pillow with which the princes were smothered in the tower of London, and if you don't go in the tower of London, and if you don't go over and run him in he will be carting away the bedclothes and the family Bible."
"I am sorry to say," said the policeman, shedding a real tear, "that I have not the authority to arrest him. If you could not him to a attack you with the scimiter or shoot poisoned arrows into the furniture, I would consider it a pleasure to lock him up."—Chicago Tribune.

Not So Mad as That.

In a small Connecticut town a few years ago the constable, a small, heppecked look-ing little man, had to assist a keeper in tak-ing a madman to the county asylum. The latter had been at times very violen and being a strong man was much feared. After coaxing him from his house to the station they got him aboard the train, and seeing he was in a quiet mood the keeper tried to inspire him with fear so as to make

He told the madman many thrilling inci-dents of the constable's great strength and bravery, lastly adding that he knew no fear, that he would go into a lion's den. The madman eyed the constable's meager proportions contemptuously and quietly said, "Yes, he might—when the lions were out."—London Answer.

Cloves are the unopened flower of a small evergreen tree that resembles in appearance the laurel of the bay. It is a native of the Malacca or Spice islands, but has been carried to all warmer parts of the world, and it is now cultivated in the tropical regions of American gions of America. The flowers are small in size and grow in large numbers in clusters to the very end of the branches.

The cloves we use are the flowers gatheres before they are opened and while they are still green. After being gathered, they are smoked by a wood fire and then dried in shoken by a wook are and ched drawn in the sun. Each clove consists of two parts of a round head, which are the four petals or leaves of the flower rolled up, inclosing a number of small stakes or filaments. The other part of the cloves is terminated with four points, and is, in fact, the flower cup of the unripe seed vessel. All these parts may be distinctly seen if a few cloves are soaked for a short time in hot water, when the leaves of the flower soften and readily
